

Energy and imported raw material prices

General overview

The French National Institute for Statistics and Economic Studies (INSEE) calculates every month foreign currency and euro indices of imported raw material prices (excluding energy). These indices reflect changes in the prices of the main raw materials imported by France. In addition, INSEE publishes price series at a disaggregated level, by commodity, in foreign currencies (mainly in US dollars, but also directly in euros for a number of series, see table1).

The list of raw materials monitored includes in particular nine so-called “strategic” materials for French industry: silver, chromium, cobalt, copper, lithium, molybdenum, nickel, palladium and platinum. These materials are a non-exhaustive selection of raw materials with which French industry is particularly dependent, particularly with regard to the energy transition. This selection is based on the work of the French Geological and Mining Research Bureau \(BRGM\) on critical and strategic materials (in French).

Simultaneously, INSEE publishes the price of North Sea crude oil (Brent) listed at London, the price of natural gas on the European market quoted in the Netherlands (TTF) and the price of uranium (U_3O_8) quoted at the New York Mercantile Exchange (see table2).

Finally, it should be noted that the prices of refined petroleum products are no longer published in the Informations Rapides “Prices of energy and imported raw materials” from March 2024, but the series are still published in INSEE's macroeconomic database (BDM): the price of premium fuel from the US Energy Information Agency (EIA) and the price of diesel traded on London's Intercontinental Exchange (ICE). Northwest European naphtha is quoted at the New York Mercantile Exchange (NYMEX) (see table3).

Methodology

For most commodities, the prices considered are spot prices: quantities purchased for immediate delivery, which differs from the quotation of futures contracts. These are reference prices for the market. For some commodities, the prices quoted are futures prices: in these cases, the title of the series specifies the nature of the maturity in question.

The monthly price series made available are either monthly prices covering the period, or monthly averages of daily or weekly prices.

At base 100 in 2010, the price indices for raw materials imported by France are Laspeyres chained indices. The weights used to aggregate the indices represent the share of each commodity (excluding energy) in French imports for the previous year. They are updated each year in February or March, which may result in revisions to the January aggregate indices when applicable. Depending on new data available regarding previous years, revisions over longer periods may also take place.

More generally, the published indices may be revised over time, particularly when some data sources are modified for availability reasons.

The composition of the indices is detailed in Table4.

Sources

Prices of each commodity are collected by external providers on the major world markets (table1).

Brent oil, quoted on the free market “InterContinental Exchange” of London stock exchange, is reference crude oil of European supply.

The TTF (Title Transfer Facility) is the virtual trading point for natural gas in the Netherlands, considered to be the benchmark market in Europe.

The price of natural uranium is triuranium octoxide (U_3O_8), quoted at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Dissemination

Each month, INSEE publishes an issue of its “Informations Rapides” collection, which brings together all the price indices for imported raw materials (excluding energy), as well as the prices of the energy sources tracked. The publication is available on Insee website:

Data of historical series are available on the macroeconomic database (BDM) of Insee:

Identifiers related to each commodity are noted in every tables.
