Quarterly business survey in real-estate development – January 2014

In January 2014, the demand for new dwellings stays weak

The demand for new dwellings stays sluggish

In January 2014, developers consider the demand for new housing degraded. The corresponding balance of opinion remains stable and stays significantly below its long-term average. Business managers forecast an amelioration in housing starts for the next three months, linked to the improvement in housing starts for sale. Nevertheless, the corresponding balance of opinion remains below its long-term average.

Unsold dwelling stock might increase

More developers than in October indicate a rise of unsold dwelling stock. The balance of opinion is sharply above its long-term average.

More developers indicate a drop in prices

In January, more developers than in October, indicate a fall in average prices of new housing; the corresponding balance of opinion is again significantly below its long-term average. Their opinion about the downpayment to acquire a new dwelling is less degraded compared to the previous quarter. Fewer developers than in October, forecast a decrease in the financing capacity to purchase a new housing.
