Quarterly business survey in real-estate development – April 2014

In April 2014, the demand for new dwellings decreases

The demand for new dwellings decreases

In April 2014, more developers than in January indicate a fall in the demand for new housing. The corresponding balance of opinion is significantly below its long-term average. Business managers forecast a decline in housing starts for sale for the next three months. Conversely, housing starts for rent will improve.

Unsold dwelling stock might increase

Fewer developers than in January indicate a rise of unsold dwelling stock. But, the balance of opinion is still sharply above its long-term average.

Fewer developers indicate a drop in prices

In April, fewer developers than in January indicate a fall in average prices of new housing; the corresponding balance of opinion is again significantly below its long-term average. Their opinion about the downpayment to acquire a new dwelling is almost stable. Far more developers than in January forecast a decrease in the financing capacity to purchase a new housing.
