Third month of stability in food prices in hyper and supermarkets

In February 2017, the prices of food excluding fresh products sold in hyper and supermarkets remained stable. They have not changed since November 2016. Year on year, they dropped slightly, scarcely less than in January (-0.2% after -0.3%).

The month-on-month stability came from a slight rise in beverages prices offset by a downturn in other food prices. A stability in meat prices also contributed to this.

After a slight decrease in January (-0.1%), meat prices were stable anew in February 2017. Year on year, they accelerated a little: +0.3% after +0.2%. It has been their highest increase since May 2016.

The prices of beverages sold in hyper and supermarkets slowed slightly (+0.1% after +0.2% in January). Year on year, they rose a little more than in the previous month (+0.2% after +0.1%).

The prices of other food products (excluding fresh food) fluctuated feebly (-0.1% after +0.1%). Year on year, these prices fell by 0.7%, as in the previous month.

Stability in prices of cleaning and personal care products in hyper and supermarkets

In February, the prices of cleaning and personal care products sold in hyper and supermarkets were unchanged after a downturn of 0.3% in January. Year on year, they fell by 0.5% as in the previous month.
