Renewed optimism about employment prospects

The balance on past employment has decreased in retail trade as in motor trade. It has come back to its average in retail trade and remains significantly above it in motor trade. The balance on expected employment has recovered, hitting a ten-year high, mainly because of a sharp rebound in the motor trade sector. In retail trade this balance has advanced again, slightly above its average.

In retail trade, the business climate is stable

In retail trade, the business climate remains favourable. The composite indicator that measures it is stable, at 108. It has stood above its average (100) since May 2017.

The balance concerning recent sales is virtually stable just above its mean level. It has edged down in non-specialised trade and slightly increased in specialised trade.

In retail trade as a whole, fewer managers than last month have anticipated a rise in their orders but nearly as many have expected an increase in their sales. Both corresponding balances stay above their average. Stocks have been deemed practically stable, at their standard level from now on.

More retailers than in January have foreseen increases in prices over the next months. The associated balance has recovered and exceeded its average.

In trade and repair of motor vehicles, the business climate improves again

In trade and repair of motor vehicles and motor cycles, the business climate has gained two points. At 120, it has reached its highest point since the beginning of the survey in this sector (2003), significantly above its average (100).

However, the balance on past sales has declined, as the one on general business outlook. Those about expected sales and ordering intentions are stable. These four balances remain significantly above their mean level.

Stocks have been considered slightly higher, the corresponding balance moving above its average.

The balance on expected prices has increased and has reached a level unseen since September 2008.
